

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

It is appalling to think that you would even consider denying small, independant ISP's the same privilage and opportunity offered to giant corporations. Small, local companies offer selective recources that are of interest to it's local consumer base according to knowlege of and connection to the local customer as a result of sharing the same environments. Many bright and talented individuals start and opperate these smaller companies which often provide innovation and devlopments which arise from the creative minds of those who are driven to make a difference as a result of having ownership in decisonions they make. You remove the right of smaller ISP's to share in and exploit DSL technology.....you dissolve their abilities to compete as well as eliminating many jobs which will not be restored by the companies who will ultimately pick up their former customers, effecting many economies. Furthermore; restricting the drive of brilliant minds.

Thank you,
Tom Jecker

Sincerely,
